AMICORE AND HEALTH LANGUAGE, INC. COLLABORATE
Combined Resources to Address Data Management Issues

Andover (MA) and Aurora (CO): Amicore, Inc., the practice improvement company based in Andover (MA), and Health Language, Inc. (HLI), a software infrastructure company, today announced a business relationship designed to introduce structured clinical vocabularies to physician practices and to streamline the flow of information between providers, ancillary services and insurers.

Richard Noffsinger, President of Amicore[®], says, "Creating a system of data exchange based on accepted terminology standards between all parties in the healthcare industry is critical. We look forward to working with Health Language, Inc., and intend to use their expertise in interfacing complex medical data systems with our products to improve and streamline the delivery of services for physicians."

"HLI technology increases patient safety and improves patient care by optimizing communication among clinicians and computer systems," explains George Schwend, President and CEO of Health Language. "Our products address the rapidly growing common language needs of the worldwide healthcare technology industry, and we are happy to announce this relationship with Amicore."

"This partnership means physician practices will have better clinical alert systems, more reliable outcome information and reporting ability, and can interface with other practices to develop a 'best practices' approach to their delivery of quality patient care," concludes Mr. Noffsinger.
